Very cute and somewhat short(episode 1) adventure-game with very retro graphics but full mouse controls. Nice and intuitive puzzle-design. If you don't mind it being short it go for it.. Love the ASCII art :). The sound, oh my dear friend Is key for one's mind to bend, Around the story that's told here Experienced with few a gear. Easy the intuition goes and lack the game does any woes, enjoy this ride of yours so fast as I will wait for episodes more at last.. Honestly, I ABSOLUTELY don't know how and why this slideshow-game manage to be so enjoyable. It's like tiny, very casual (VERY) child of King's Quest series. You see some gnomes, witches, fairyes and other fairytale's cliché heroes and do "go there, bring this" to make wedding cake, but atmosphere, funny goofy writing and music support interest to play on. Glad to see games like this, who know what story they want to tell and how to do it right. Only one nitpick I can name - lack of 'model' for character. Camera perspective not from the eyes of hero, so there be logic to but on screen, wich walk from screen to screen as a character.. I really liked this game. It's a fun little point and click adventure set in a fairy tale world, with talking donkeys and stupid rhymes, that made me laugh out loud sometimes. If you are into the retro aesthetics I recommend, that you try it out.. Sweet little point and click adventure in a world filled with silly rhymes and charming ascii art.

Episode 2: The Sadness out now! : Happy Easter everybody: The Sadness is here! As the story kicks into gear, you'll be faced with greater challenges and more complex puzzles as you discover new and unexplored worlds - and perhaps even learn the art of putting two items together to create something new! We've also taken this opportunity to introduce a couple of improvements and tweaks for Episode 1: Keyboard navigation, expanded default responses, more clarity in certain character interactions, as well as smaller bug fixes and rebalancing of achievements.. Episode 2 Release Announcement : We are excited to announce that The Pepper Prince Episode 2: The Sadness will be released on April 22nd ! And as a special Thank You to our supporters, owners of the Seasoning Pass get early access to the episode.
